

What is FPCC?

The Faith and Positive Change for Children, Families, and Communities (FPCC) initiative was launched in 2018 as a faith engagement approach to broaden the scope and influence of faith in development and humanitarian work beyond small-scale, ad-hoc, single-sector, single-faith, and occasionally instrumentalist approaches.

The FPCC model has three major components:

- i. Faith-centered research and mapping to ensure evidence-based and contextually appropriate approaches.
- ii. Promoting community/congregational feedback, engagement and action using the Mind and Heart Dialogue approach to experiential learning, training and equipping of religious leaders, faith actors and other stakeholders to ensure interactive and reflective approaches that build on faith teachings and values in addressing children's issues from a social behavior perspective.
- iii. The establishment of long-term intra/inter/multi/faitn coordination and partnership mechanisms for ongoing planning, implementation, and oversight. This includes faith groups, FBOs, and UNICEF country offices and teams and other partners linked to existing country-level multi-faith coordination mechanisms and structures. acceptance of community life-saving interventions.
